

Are you a "competent, confident professional"?

The social work role is enmeshed in a complex web of legislation and guidance that has grown up piecemeal over a period of nearly 40 years. The law influences and shapes social work practice, and regulates social work decision making.

Law is often seen as alien to social work values, a tool of oppression and control. However, it is possible to see law as a source of empowerment, if a way can be found through the maze where legal rules, organisational contexts and professional practice meet.

This is what some of our existing members say...

"I am very happy with all that the VLC has to offer. The service has more up to date information than you would find anywhere else. It's also easily accessible and that's important when working."

"I love this service – well done, it has been such a support to me!"

"Brilliant, succinct site for such a vast topic."

"I have found the VLC very useful to dip in and out of to get updates on Social Work law & policy."

The Virtual Learning Centre offers a detailed and consistent approach that allows you to explore the relationship between the law and social work thinking across a range of Scottish practice settings.

Social Work and the Law in Scotland

Edited by Deborah Baillie, this anthology offers a fresh and wide-ranging exploration of the critical links between practice issues and the legal framework regulating social work in Scotland.

Made up largely of newly commissioned pieces by leading academics and practitioners in the field, it explores key conceptual and thematic issues and core areas of law and practice, as well as incorporating first-hand accounts from stakeholders in a range of settings.
